

Thank you very much.

We'll switch the beat to a waltz for our next song from the Roaring Twenties. This one was written by Irving Berlin back in 1923 about his fiancée who had been sent to Europe by her father in the hopes that she would forget about Irving. She didn't, and eventually they were married. In the song, Irving longs disconsolately for his love, imagining how he can go on without her.

Here's _____ with our version of this rather mournful soliloquy - "What'll I Do."
