

Thank you. Are you all having a good time/

We'll slow things up a bit for our next selection so you can catch your breath. It was written back in 1943 and recorded by Bing Crosby. At the time, it expressed the hope of many soldiers in World War II that they would once again join their families in celebrating the Christmas season. Since then, it's been recorded by a whole host of artists, including Perry Como and Frank Sinatra.

In December 1965, as astronauts Frank Borman and James Lovell were hurtling back to earth aboard their Gemini 7 spacecraft, they were asked by NASA communication personnel if they wanted any particular music piped up to them. The crew requested this song.

Here is "I'll Be Home For Christmas."
