

Thank you. How are we doing? Are you having a good time remembering these great songs from musical theatre?

Our next song is from a musical which has been called "the perfect musical," - "My Fair Lady" - written by Lerner and Loewe in 1956. You'll remember the story of the young lady, Eliza Doolittle, with the cockney accent who was schooled in the ways of refined speech by her mentor, Professor Henry Higgins.

The song we'll perform was sung by Eliza's father, Alfred, and is about a list of everyday situations that people find themselves in. By taking the easy way out, one's fate might change, thus avoiding any responsibility.

Here we go with our version of "With A Little Bit Of Luck." Take it away, Mr. Doolittle!
